The defendant's testimony was consistent in all aspects, save for the reason that he claimed not to have had sexual intercourse with the child. During the State's case, the defendant called the complainant's mother to testify. The testimony was that the mother had knowledge of certain conversations between the defendant and the complainant and that she had been married to a young man before this incident with the defendant took place. This testimony was objected to by the State and the objection was sustained. The defendant never made an offer of proof. The defendant contends that the testimony of the mother regarding knowledge of the conversations was proper for impeachment purposes. However, the defendant has not directed this court to any case law that would support such contention. We note that at trial, no offer of proof was made as to how this testimony would be impeaching the complainant or of its admissibility for any other purpose. As a general rule, there must be an offer of proof if one desires to secure the reversal of a judgment for the exclusion of evidence, as the exclusion of evidence is a step in the trial of a case. Jones v. State, 595 So.2d 846 (Ala.Cr.App.1991). Finally, the defendant contends that it was improper for the prosecutor to ask a state witness about statements by the defendant that were made in the presence of law enforcement officers and to which the defendant had not been present. The officer testified that the defendant told him that if he could find any drugs on the #840 defendant, he would deal with him. The defendant contends that this questioning was irrelevant, prejudicial, and immaterial and that he was denied his right to confront witnesses against him. The State contends that the questioning was not improper and that it was proper for the prosecutor to be allowed to impeach the defendant by introducing the very evidence that the defendant had previously threatened a law enforcement officer with harm. The State contends that the defendant cannot "legally dictate to the state the means by which it may impeach a party's witness." This is a valid argument. There are numerous cases in which it has been held that the police cannot reveal the fruits of their 3e33713323
