A unique virtual machine for handheld computing written in Java has been produced by Guangdong University of Chinese Electronics and Information and was presented during the International Conference on Microelectronics (ICMEC '12). With virtual machines, instead of downloading software directly from the Internet, the user can choose to run software on a server hosted on the Internet and accessed from the handheld through a standard Web browser. This software runs on any Windows platform, such as Tablet PCs or PDA. This approach makes it more convenient for the user to launch and use software. Pengfei Wang, from the Department of Computer Science and Technology,

Guangdong University, China, stated, "We can provide a user-friendly and universal virtual machine that can be run on any computer or handheld". The research team intends to make this virtual machine available to the public. Plc Backup Tools V6 0 436. Related LinksSierra. Image with no alt text. Plastic Screwdriver Kit.
