What's New In?

Volume rendering is a technique that allows for the depiction of a 3-dimensional object on a two dimensional image. For example, doctors can see the inside of the human body in real time. The difference between 2D and 3D rendering is that in 3D rendering, it is possible to select the viewpoint of the observer. For example, if a 3D image is viewed from the side, the observer can see only half the object. This kind of volumetric data, for example MRI scans, are not displayed on a screen but need a virtual volume, displayed as the volume renders from different angles. This is the task of the volume rendering software. Originality: The originality of 3DView is that the user does not have to know how to use volumetric rendering software in order to use it. The software is made as easy as possible for the user so that they will have a volume rendering application that is both fast and easy to use. Educational value: 3DView uses simple interface so that it is possible for the user to learn at their own pace. Furthermore, 3DView has been written with pedagogical values so that it is possible to work with interactive objects and volumes to aid learning of the subject. Contributions: 3DView has not been developed in a vacuum and the authors of the software acknowledge other projects they have used for inspiration. References: The following resources have been used as the inspiration and or reference for 3DView:
