The history of the connected battlespace, part one: Command, control, and conquer.The federal agency would be given responsibility for regulation of the $1.3 trillion cryptocurrency market. U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) Chairman Jay Clayton has said that such a digital asset regime would "take place by the end of the first quarter of this year". The SEC's investigation will include assessing whether certain tokens issued as initial coin offerings, or ICOs, constitute securities, Clayton said. ICOs launched by tokens that the U.S. regulator has deemed securities is unlawful because they raise funds from U.S. investors without first adhering to the SEC's registration and disclosure requirements. In 2018 alone, more than $1.7 billion was raised through ICOs and some 130,000 investors reportedly contributed to or were interested in investing in more than 1,100 start-ups. So far, the SEC has taken no action against any ICOs that have raised funds as a result of the ongoing probe. They have only issued cease-and-desist orders to some ICO project promoters or to crowdfunding portals. The commission has also been using its regulatory authority to send cease-and-desist orders to other unregulated crypto-related companies. In May, it ordered Chicago-based crypto security platform CipherTrace to stop offering surveillance products to law enforcement agencies without proper safeguards. In January, it issued a similar order to Axolotl Labs, another company that offers crypto surveillance tools. "We are actively engaged in this work. It's our highest priority. We're making progress, but there's still a lot to do." Given the high amount of money involved, the SEC wants to issue rules on the trade of cryptocurrencies such as bitcoin, ethereum and litecoin, plus tokens issued by some digital assets. The agency is particularly concerned about so-called security tokens, which are a subset of cryptocurrencies, that can be considered securities subject to SEC oversight. "What our investigation will examine, among other things, are questions about which digital assets should be
