A: You should set a session variable on success on a page that will stop the attempt to login.

prepare("SELECT Password, Password_repeat FROM Users WHERE Email = :email"); $stmt->execute(array( "email" => $_POST["email"] )); $searchresult = $stmt->fetch(); if($searchresult!= null) { if($searchresult["Password"] == $_POST["password"]
