Prestige Records, founded by Jammy, the celebrated Jamaican producer, said this week that they were putting out a retrospective of Tosh's work, including collections of his greatest hits, unreleased material and new tracks recorded in the last two years of his life. The Guardian has learnt that the album will be released in the UK in February. Tosh was an iconic figure in reggae, and most famous for hits such as Positive Vibration, The King, Stereotype, I Don't Want To Go To Jail and Legalize It. His style was in direct opposition to Bob Marley, and he represented a new generation of Jamaican musicians, looking towards the US for their inspiration. He died of cancer in December 2003, aged 57. Jammy said he decided to release the material after 20 years of holding on to the tape and CDs, having put the record out when he was just 26. He said: "It's pretty emotional, it's got a lot of special meaning, and we hope that people like Peter's music. I think in the past his lyrics have been under-acknow
