ELSEWHERE NELSON IS SORRY! Ludia Games webmaster NOTES: ✖The following information is based on my own findings and my own speculation, and may not always be correct. 1. There are 6 different cities in the game (Yugo, Gagalu, Hamuni, Fabi, Ese, and Eselmau). There are several secrets, such as weapons and armor in each of these cities, and also various items and letters that change the game's story. 2. The order for the route is as follows: Ese Dungeon -> Gagalu -> Yugo -> Fabi -> Hamuni -> Eselmau. 3. It is impossible to see the path to the last city (Eselmau) from the first city (Ese). 4. It is also impossible to see the path to the middle cities (Gagalu, Hamuni, and Fabi) from the first city (Ese).

5. It is recommended that you complete the route from (Yugo) to (Eselmau), as there are no enemies in the routes between the first and second cities (Gagalu, Hamuni, and Fabi), and there is a festival in Yugo during the summer. (YUGO)
It is also recommended that you complete the route from the second to third city (Fabi) as there is an enemy attack in there.
It is recommended that you complete the route from the third to the fourth city (Hamuni) as there is a festival in Hamuni during the summer. It is recommended that you complete the route from the fourth to the fifth city (

During a press conference yesterday, video game streaming service GameFly hit its one-million mark in downloads of various games across PC, Mac, iPad, and smartphones. GameFly, co-founded in 2001 by CEO Derek Dillon, initially hit 2.7 million downloads back in November, and has seen an approximate 5% monthly growth for the last few months. Dillon said that they've received nearly 500,000 new downloads every month since October, and their staff has been working overtime to catch up. GameFly also just introduced a new program, dubbed GameFly Cloud, that allows users to save their own cloud and mobile downloads. It costs $9.99 per month, but can be cancelled at any time. The company also noted that their users are spending anywhere from 15 to 80 minutes a day, per game, streaming from their network. Dillon also said that they're seeing the number of streaming sessions drop as of late, but he stressed that this is because of the new new GameFly Cloud program, which allows players to back up their own game files. It's also worth noting that GameFly is finally being accepted by consumers as a legitimate service, as once most people looked down on it due to the fact it was an IP-address only network that worked only in America. It also had a reputation as a company that didn't take piracy seriously. Dillon said that today, only one in ten customers are digital download-only users. He then went on to say that they consider that number to be a victory for them, but the company still has a long way to go. Despite the 1-million mark being reached, GameFly has had a rocky history. Back in 2005, it was sold to News Corp. for $263 million, but it was forced to file for bankruptcy after falling to a class action lawsuit that claimed that the company was overcharging consumers and didn't do enough to protect copyright. The company ended up settling the lawsuit, but the bankruptcy forced GameFly into a court-mandated restructuring. That was all in the past, though. Dillon now hopes that the streaming service will continue to grow, and eventually rival services such as Microsoft's Xbox Live, Sony's PlayStation Network, and even Redbox Instant by Verizon. To help with that, GameFly is currently in talks to acquire other services like Gog (previously GameflyOn.com), and KOF (KO
