Dungeon Danger Traps is the first roguelike take on the genre, with a turn-based system that offers near endless replayability. A total of 20 short dungeons can be played through. Each map is split into 4 areas, each area having 3 different level ranges for novices to experts. Each level range has its own unique traps, so the dungeons are quite varied, once you are through the first set of 20 levels. The enemies – both the player and the baddies – have been designed with great care, and the traps are just as good and bad as they should be. Dungeons are short, but packed with unique challenges. Features: The classic roguelike format with a new twist – Now instead of the traditional concept of solving problems by getting your hands dirty, you use your mind to solve problems. The item-based game concept allows for infinite replayability. The game is turn-based, so everything takes time and every move counts. Your character has limited HP, so use your thinking to live longer, and longer. A Unique Story – The game starts during a meteor shower, right before the apocalypse. Your father was a scientist working for an aerospace manufacturing company, and he was at work when the meteor shower started. The meteorite that fell on your town destroyed the aerospace company. Your father wasn't at work at the time, and he is now trapped inside the company, along with most of the workers. Your father managed to see the meteorite fall through the window of his office, and he figured out that the meteorite was made of a special metal. So he decided to collect the metal from the meteorite to make a weapon that can be used against the apocalypse. Unfortunately, before he can finish his weapon, the foremen found out, and so he had to escape from the company, taking with him the prototype for the weapon. Turn-based Combat System – Every character has its own stats, talents, and skills. Use your stats wisely to optimize your character for battle. Use your talents to improve them further. Turn-based combat lets you plan your action, and then think carefully about what action to execute next. You will die, and so you have to try and become a better player. If you die, you will have to wait a turn before you may do anything. But each turn costs money, so you better get more experience in your new, improved character. Combat Challenges – The traps aren't just a part of the game, but

The world isn't all "click-clack" and "bing, bing" here. We give you a rough outline of a full range of possible damage. You can do damage by carefully checking the right analog stick or trigger. This is your best starting point, but there's tons of ways to achieve a cool take down. Everything in the game is designed around violent movement. There are no traps. If you want to get the drop on someone, you can do it. This build is good for 2v1, but it's also good for 2v2. We have provided a few basic suggestions for build paths. If there's something you're specifically interested in, or a problem you're having, reply to this thread. We're all kind of gamers and we really want you to have fun. Reply back to us anytime and we will get back to you. We want you to have fun, so we're not gonna' bury you with technicalities. This is a survival game. We want you to have fun. We'll work with you if you get stuck. If you have questions, ask away. Our goal is to get as many players in the game and start doing cool stuff as quickly as possible. If you have even one question, take a minute to type it in the comments. If you find a solution, reply back to us. Put it in the comments. We'll work on getting it applied to the server. Feel free to refer to the technical documentation, but don't hold your breath. You're probably not going to figure it out, but we'd like to see it. What's new:

Queen, I'm just a girl People have speculated about my sexuality and even tried to recruit my high school pastor to put me in a place where nobody would have to know the true answer, which is "yes." They're horrified. I am horrified. Among my hesitations when I started answering these questions two years ago was whether or not I would be engaged in any backstabbings. It's been a rather important issue, certainly, in light of the context that I've been accused of doing those things. The phrase "backstabbing" tends to have a negative connotation, the product of right-wing culture in which everyone is evil and the wicked are always getting their comeuppance. (Thanks, Stephen Collins!) The notion that a woman would have a penchant for backstabbing, in the language of women's magazines, means that she only feeds on men's gonads. Not only that — in the speech of "normal" people, she's a bitch. Today, I am forever on the defensive, and I have always been a creep on the inside. I didn't actually know girls did things like that. Now I know, and I am very glad that I've learned this side of the "monster demo queen" rumor. In order to learn some balance, I am going to talk to people who are very different from me on a variety of levels. I want to talk to women, and who can better speak to that than a female blogger? Yet in order for this conversation to have content that can be helpful to anyone, it needs to be sufficiently positive — however, it is impossible to not say anything about other possible sexual identities. So, here goes. All of you. On that note. And on the next bit. I'm gonna be nice and leave the bowing out to you: This blog* is very much for you if you are gay, lesbian or bi. You are welcome to contribute to this blog, and I look forward to reading your stories. You are welcome and encouraged to link to this blog. I may not approve of some of the things you post, but you have permission to post things you don't like, or you can write things that I don't approve of, and you don't have
