"Recursion" is a short but highly intense puzzle game in which the only tool is reflection. You're playing in a 2D world where a number of objects float in space. All of them are the same: a circle with an equilateral triangle in the middle. The rules are simple: Move objects around, by dragging them with your mouse, until they touch each other. The goal is to have as many objects touching each other as possible, while there are no other rules. Don't expect the game to be easy. It's a great challenge that will reward hard work. The game art and music are made using a Unity3D engine. The game music is composed by Shota Nakama, of the UNITY3D music game engine team. "Recursion" was programmed by Sören König, in his spare time. • EA games are trademarks of their respective owners. Sören König decided to write Recursed based on a game jam he created a year ago. He played the game only three times and was very impressed by the game experience. He knew he had to try to write his own game that could be just as good, if not better. Recursion was created when Sören started a new game and was overwhelmed with hard-to-solve bugs. He began to feel ill at ease and wanted to finish his game. He wanted to get rid of these bugs, and for the first time in his career, he faced a completely open world. He was thrilled with the result and felt it was a goal worth sharing. Recursion is a short puzzle game with simple rules. You can solve it yourself, since there is no help text. The only instruction is to drag items on a layer and to see if you can make objects touch each other. The game, built in Unity 3D, explores the idea of how simple rules can create complex results. Features: Shooting for multi-platform releases - Linux, Windows, Mac OSX Audio-visual - Audio only without any soundtrack / music, to make the gameplay more intuitive Rating: *Some graphics are still missing, some have been added by me.
