Duodenal duplication is a rare anomaly of the gastrointestinal tract occurring in approximately 1 in 25,000 live births. It is sometimes a sequelae of some form of congenital abdominal wall defect. Presenting symptoms include gastrointestinal bleeding, abdominal pain, and iron deficiency anemia. This report describes a 16-month-old girl with a duodenal duplication cyst presenting with recurrent episodes of vomiting and excessive weight loss. The differential diagnosis and management are discussed with a review of the literature Jack Parks Stephen Jack Parks (1924 - 1992) was an English screenwriter, actor and film producer who was born in Westminster in 1924. He was also the younger brother of the playwright Alan John Parks. In his work as a writer, Parks wrote dialogue for such films as The Madwoman of Chailot (1969) and The Go-Between (1971) and also worked as a screenwriter and producer on television, at one time running his own production company. Early life Parks was born in Westminster, but spent his early years in South London, where he attended South Norwood County School. A regular filmgoer from an early age, Parks was the brother of the screenwriter Alan Parks. It is reported that a young Alan Parks and Jack Parks spent much of their childhood walking to the cinema on expense a time, in order to earn the ticket money. Parks attended Eastbourne College, but left at 14 without completing his education. Career As a writer
