It is just not a matter of "either/or", and it does not make the situation any easier. I love my husband and I love my dog, but my husband and my dog should not be the center of my world, because they are not. It is not that I do not like dogs, but that my love for my husband is eternal and immeasurable. Even if I had to give away my dog and live with him in a hole in the ground for a thousand years, I would still love him. I love my husband because I love him. And just because I love him, does not mean that he is entitled to more of my time and my attention. My dog is entitled to my affection, my time and my attention. All I am saying is that even a blind man can see that a man and a woman can be together, or a man and a dog can be together, or a woman and a dog can be together. There is nothing wrong with that, and there is no need to create division or try to do anything to feel guilty. I don't understand why some people can't just be loving towards other people or animals without trying to make them feel guilty for doing the same, or trying to justify it by saying that their love is "different". I believe that when you try to make one or more people feel guilty for doing the same thing, that you are trying to make them feel as if they are doing something wrong. I know that I have never seen my boyfriend and I not be loving towards each other or towards any of our children. We have always been able to find a way to have fun, even when we are tired of being together. I know that I have never seen any of my boyfriend's friends or his siblings be anything other than loving towards him, even when they were tired. I know that I have never seen any of my boyfriend's parents be anything other than loving towards him and him towards them. I have never seen any of my husband's parents or his siblings or his friends or his co-workers be anything but loving towards him or him towards them. I have never seen any of my husband's family or my own family or my friends be anything but loving towards each other, or
