The long term goal of this project is to obtain detailed information on the extent of lipid peroxidation (LPO) in myocardial ischemic and reperfused tissues, and to determine the relationship between LPO and the action of physiological scavengers of reactive species, including alpha-tocopherol, and other antioxidants. Reactive species, particularly the highly reactive hydroxyl radical, are produced during ischemia, and have been implicated in LPO. The production of reactive species is catalysed by transition metal ions, and these can be measured spectrofluorometrically using chelating agents. The extent of LPO during ischemia and reperfusion will be determined by measuring the production of two products of LPO, malondialdehyde and 4-hydroxynonenal. The interdependence of lipid peroxidation and the mechanism of scavengers of reactive species on LPO and tissue recovery after ischemia and reperfusion.// Copyright (c) 2012 Ecma International.
