Osteocalcin is a hormone that plays a role in bone metabolism. We found previously that osteocalcin affects gastric acid secretion in isolated guinea pig parietal cells, probably by enhancing cyclic AMP production. We therefore investigated the role of osteocalcin in gastric acid secretion in vivo using the rapid peroral method. Gastric secretion was measured after injection of osteocalcin or insulin at a dose of 0.05 or 0.2 U/kg into the jugular vein. Osteocalcin decreased gastric acid secretion by about 50% at a dose of 0.05 U/kg and by about 90% at a dose of 0.2 U/kg. In contrast, insulin had no effect on gastric acid secretion. These results suggest that osteocalcin is an important factor in gastric acid secretion in the stomach. Wentworth Fox Sir Wentworth

Fox (26 February 1833 – 28 March 1904) was the inventor and founder of Fox's Mechanical Engineering Company. The firm is now known as W. Fox & Sons.

Early life Wentworth Fox was born the son of Henry Fox and Anne Moore, in a house on Station Street, Woolwich, London, England. Fox was educated at a Quaker school, the Hewell Grange Grammar School in Godalming, Surrey, England.

Career Fox left home at the age of 15 to become an apprentice with Michael D. Ewart, a Wiltshire clock- and watch-maker, and began a long career as an engineer. He developed in particular a semiconical machine that was a precursor to the can opener, and proceeded to test and perfect this device. In microsomal cytochrome P-450 levels and induction by phenobarbital and dexamethasone. We studied the effect of dexamethasone and phenobarbital on the levels of cytochrome P-450 in rat liver microsomes, using [14C]CO₂ assays.

Following a single oral dose (50 mg/kg) of these inducers, the cytochrome P-450 levels decreased in a highly reproducible way. The levels of cytochrome P-450 decreased by about 15% within 24 hours after the induction with dexamethasone and by about 20% 48 hours after induction with phenobarbital. There was no change in the amount of cytochrome P-450 per mg protein during the first 48 hours after induction with dexamethasone. Cytochrome P-450 levels returned to control values within 10 days of induction. Cytochrome P-450 levels were increased when animals were pretreated with dexamethasone and then exposed to phenobarbital (inhibition) and vice versa (induction). Cytochrome P-450 levels of female rats were lower than those of males. Credit: CC0 Public Domain
