Locky is the most destructive ransomware ever. It is a ransomware made to allow hackers to make any ransom payments. The only known cure is a system restore. You will lose every file, both on your desktop, in your Downloads folder, and on any cloud services you use. Although Locky is not a new ransomware, it is some of the most popular. The fact that it has little or no resistance to static analysis shows that the developer is just a normal geek and not a professional. The developer claims that the encryption used is the best he has heard of, but it really does not matter. If you are lucky, you may lose only the affected files. The biggest problem with Locky is that, unlike some other well known ransoms, it will encrypt your files with AES-256. You can decrypt this AES key, but it will take hours (if not days or weeks) to do that. So you are screwed. How you may be affected: You will receive an email claiming your computer has been infected with a virus called Locky. In fact, you are not infected with a virus. You are infected with one of the most aggressive and successful ransomware software as of now. When you click on the attached file, you will receive a small PowerShell script that you must execute. When you execute it, it will ask you to choose between three options. If you only accept the ransom demand, nothing more will happen. If you refuse, the script will encrypt every file. If you negotiate too high a ransom, the script will continue encrypting your files and contacts until you make the right choice. In any case, the script will ask you to pay 5 Bitcoin (BTC) or 100 Euro (EUR) via the Tor network to a certain Bitcoin address. This address is fake and is a way to make you believe you are safe by making you send the ransom money. There is a reason why the developers created this address: you have to send the money to them. After that, they will decrypt your files. If you do not do so, you won't be able to access your files until you restore them using an anti-virus. The best way to get rid of this ransomware is to restore from an image. You should use an image that is stored on your local network drive, preferably on a different disk. Your image
