Photosensitizers for photodynamic therapy (PDT) are typically activated by sunlight or ultraviolet (UV) light. However, these light sources have limited applicability, including only superficial tissues. Therefore, we synthesized a novel PDT agent that is cell-permeable and activated by a photoactivatable linker and a cell-impermeable linker, which are cleaved by hydrolysis of 4-(dimethylamino)-4'-N,N-diethylamino-biphenyl-2-carboxylate (DABCO) as a cell-impermeable linker. The PDT agent containing hydrophilic segments of DABCO at each end of the photosensitizer exhibited excellent cell-permeability, and the cleavage of DABCO under cells was effectively facilitated by a bioresponsive linker.
