Leukotriene synthesis and regulation in alveolar macrophages. The ability of rat alveolar macrophages to synthesize leukotrienes was studied in response to aggregated gamma-globulin. The release of leukotriene E4 (LTE4) in response to gamma-globulin stimulation was 5- to 10-fold higher than the release of other leukotriene products. The use of substrate probes for lipoxygenase and 5-lipoxygenase pathways showed that gamma-globulin induced leukotriene biosynthesis via both pathways, with 5-lipoxygenase products being more predominant. The ability of alveolar macrophages to metabolize the lipoxygenase products arachidonic acid and 5-HETE and

5-lipoxygenase products was evaluated. Both leukotriene and 5-HETE metabolism were stimulated by incubation with gamma-globulin. gamma-Globulin also stimulated the conversion of [14C]arachidonic acid to leukotriene products. The stimulatory effect of gamma-globulin was dose dependent (6-100 mg) and increased with an increase in incubation time (30-120 min). The addition of cyclooxygenase inhibitors, which do not affect 5-lipoxygenase activity, had no inhibitory effect on gamma-globulin-stimulated arachidonate metabolism to leukotrienes. These data indicate that alveolar mac

What's new in Time Idle RPG:

Cocktail (aka Don Roberto Cuervo After Hours) Monopoly's killer gin cocktail has been slung more than a few times over the years. Whether we've recognised it or not, someone has probably plonked quite a few nutty, monk-ry 'after hours' Gin Flashes in our snoozers after a couple of stiff ones at the weekend. Wander the Gin streets of London and you won't miss little Toby the Monkey floating by. He's got his own syrup called Brain Damage, and you might see him reaching to get some of it if he's real buzzed. Even when the crowd's not hanging over the bar, you'll have it in your head that someone's got gin flashing around the city. The Don Roberto is a cocktail that tastes like scrumptiousness to some and a heavenly sin to others. It's quite a tricky one at first sight, but once you've mastered it, it seems like such a simple and sensible drink. But if you ask Ken Gonzales his thoughts about it, he'll tell you that it's a drink he keeps coming back to over and over again because the perfection of it. Not one idea or flavour gets over played, so that one perfect drink with only a single ingredient, is difficult to create, but it's not impossible (as we know from the wonderful story of Shirley, the bartender at Lord Crewe's bar. Over the years he perfected a single ingredient drink (egg white, bitters, lemon, syrup, rum and fresh egg white). When the bartender from The Savoy bar said "I could never make the perfect drink", Shirley replied with "I already have, every day of my life. For 23 years I've made the perfect cocktail, and all because I have never stopped seeking perfection.") So, like the Don Roberto (sometimes spelled Roberto), you are locked in the pursuit for perfection and, just like the Don Roberto cocktail, you'll find that you can only achieve it with a single ingredient. It doesn't, however, demand the similar amount of skill that the rest of the cocktail world would think. Each and every step of preparation is much simpler than you would think. The main part of the drink is the gin, so don't be fright
