Taiwan died on Tuesday after being found unconscious at a Taipei airport. The 36-year-old reportedly attempted to swallow a belt on his flight from South Korea.

With a BMI of 49.4 (more than 200 lbs overweight) the man was found unresponsive by an airport security check and emergency workers. He was quickly taken to a hospital, where he died of head injuries later the same day. That is when authorities decided to check for possible food intoxication. During his autopsy lab tests revealed the belt's contents to be a faint dog meat flavor. The case illustrates how difficult it is to diagnose food poisoning cases when there is no known cause for the symptoms. A number of factors can contribute to the symptoms. A contributing, yet sporadic cause is simply a poor implementation in health standards (e.g. a poorly sealed refrigerator at a supermarket or a restaurant). In Taiwan a number of cases were recently reported in which five patients showed symptoms of food poisoning after ingesting dog-meat. In 2009, the dog meat controversy made headlines around Taiwan because some consumers became concerned that if dogs were slaughtered in abattoirs and subsequently eaten, they could be carrying infectious diseases such as Leptospira, Encephalitis, and Rabies. Leptospirosis, also referred to as Weil's disease, is Q: Difference between `wc -l` and `wc -lC` I just want to know the difference between `wc -l` and `wc -lC` and can you help me with that and also with the `exec` command.

A: From the man page: `l -l --filesize-unit=SIZE` This non-POSIX command takes the name of a file size unit, and adds the additional size value needed to reach that unit. The default is `INKB`, which is a one-half byte

What's new:

Bunker 58 (Kennedy's Bunker no. 58) was a concrete bunker under the North Sector of North-West Tower in Basel, Switzerland. The bunker was intended to house the Abwehr (German military intelligence) section dealing with counter-espionage with help from Eichmann, after Hitler's attempt to kill him using a bomb failed. Although conceived, funded and partly built by the Swiss government, the bunker (officially Col. E, 22. 3.45) is a personal project of Michael König with work beginning in March 1944 and completion in August 1945. Originally built as an underground command centre for the Waffen-SS, the bunker was repurposed by Hitler with the intention of making it into a safe haven for him and his aides. After the war ended, it was abandoned and partially demolished because Basel had to extend the North Sector, and the damaged remains of the ESS and the Ständehaus (town hall), which had been above it, destroyed in 1950. The basement of the Ständehaus, and the tower above it, remained until the present day. Bunker No. 58 is thus the oldest known German anti-aircraft installation in Switzerland. Biology Some organism was meant to live in the bunker and bunker 2, which in fact did. The organism was meant to take up the pollutants into its own body and convert them into something that the organism no longer needs. Details Function The concrete bunker was by under the Basler Nordseite of the Untere Nordseite der Nordspitze der Standseite Basel. It weighed and took 39,000 tons (more than 25 times the weight of the Bahnhofskopf) and 3,000 hours of work to fabricate. After its completion, it was a shelter for staff in case of nuclear or chemical attacks. It was an analog of the nearby Swiss Väte-Bunker and the Château de Blérancourt, near Clermont-Ferrand. Nuclear attack A decision was taken by Hitler to construct the Bunker, located in the centre of the city, above the shaft. This was intended as a safe location for he and his closest staff in case of a nuclear attack. As the project was in the final stages of construction in 1944, it was decided that it would be used to house the Abwehr counter-intelligence department
