Description of the Prior Art This invention is an improvement on the fishing lure of U.S. Pat. No. 4,457,029, issued July 3, 1984 to Donald K. Garman. The Garman lure is a unitary lure with a forward jigging tail. A bight portion having a looped stem is attached to the rearward end of the shank portion of the lure. The stem is attached to the shank with a hinge pin. A hook shaped lure is attached to the stem with the hook facing away from the stem. A plastic loop is loosely attached to the hook. When a fish swallows the lure, the stem, attached to the shank, pivots about the hinge pin and draws the fish's jaw into engagement with the loop, which slides up the shank. The fish is pulled away from the hook as the lure is drawn down the fish's throat. Prior art lures, such as the Garman lure, suffer from the problem that the fish may remain hooked after it swallows the lure. This problem is most noticeable with largemouth bass in a stagnant or slow moving body of water. The fish would need to try numerous times before it released the hook. Another problem is that it is easy for the fish to fish out the hook.A new study from the U.S. House of Representatives finds there is growing mistrust of banks and credit unions in the United States as consumer banking becomes more competitive and more accessible to small businesses, the people of the third and fourth wealthiest countries in the world.
