Mitral Regurgitation Is Associated With Hemodynamic and Structural Changes in the Mitral Valve. The aim of the study was to characterize hemodynamic and structural changes in the mitral valve in horses with ischemic mitral regurgitation. Caval veins and left atrium of 12 horses that underwent mitral valve repair (MV) were evaluated by three-dimensional quantitative echocardiography preoperatively, immediately after surgery, and 3 months after surgery. For comparison, 10 healthy horses were used as controls. Additionally, the inflow of the left atrium and the function of the subvalvular apparatus of 10 healthy horses were evaluated by transesophageal echocardiography. Postoperative echocardiographic evaluation revealed hemodynamic and structural changes in the mitral valve. Left atrium reduced significantly after surgery, and the left ventricular dimension increased significantly. Hemodynamic changes in the left atrium were caused by a decrease in volume and a significant increase in systolic time interval, indicating that regurgitation occurred from the left atrium to the left ventricle. The subvalvular apparatus became more posterior and had a smaller angle. In conclusion, there was evidence of ischemic mitral regurgitation in horses after MV repair. In
