Former IRB chairman Chris Pollock yesterday revealed he was considering running in the New Zealand election, just days after his successor, Steve Tew was named to the role. The former Canterbury Rugby Union president gave an indication yesterday he wanted to stand for the Progressive Party in Northland. Pollock said he was interested in joining a team who won the 2007 election, as his successor was a member of the winning team which took the reins from the IRB a few months ago. "I didn't want to stand out of loyalty to Steve Tew or anything like that," Pollock said, adding that he was more than happy to fill in for an absent incumbent. Pollock took over as chairman of the IRB last year, following the resignation of Tew, who is to succeed Grant Fox as chief executive of world rugby next year. Pollock, the former president of the Canterbury Rugby Union and a former national selector, said he would be taking his portfolio on the road with him. "I'm going to have a lot of time to work on selection, control of the game, finances," Pollock said. Pollock announced in December he was joining the NZRU as an advisor. The annual IRB congress in Ireland last month discussed the organisation's shake-up and the change in the IRB head post. Pollock said he thought the change in culture was quite obvious. "There are always ups and downs with selection for example and those things get talked about and it becomes a little bit of an issue," he said. "There are some positive changes. It's less pressure in the chairman's position." Pollock said the absence of a world cup would "probably" be a negative. Pollock also said he was a keen supporter of the two Super 15s and the ARU Super rugby clubs. "I haven't sat down with those two and the Super 14 clubs and put together a plan but I will after a week or two,"

Q: Is it possible to use Ping as a distributed Hash Algorithm? I thought of a way that could potentially improve a hash function in the future. I would like to get the ids of the clients that connected to the server. I have tried to create a simple ping program that sends ping's to clients. I wanted to develop a distributed hash function that could use that ping's as a key to connect to the server's id. Basically you would just need the id of one client and the ping's and you would get the id of the next client. Like this I would have to use a different type of ping. Something that will work for any kind of network, wired and wireless would be nice. Does anyone know if this is possible at all? And if it is possible, how could it be done?

A: Yes, it is possible, but it is unlikely you will find anything off the shelf that accomplishes this. However, you can certainly write your own distributed hash function using ping's as a key. The total amount of computing time required to solve the collision problem is the same as for any other form of DHD, but the latency requirement of your DHD is much lower, so throughput should

What's New In PriMus?

1. Create new projects easily: There are two ways of how you can start working on a new project, either as a new project or using templates. Regardless of which method you decide to use, you can always view all your projects in a single window. Just drag and drop a file to that window.
2. Separate all projects into sections: It is easy to re-organize your projects into sections, such as reports or bills of quantities, for a better overview of the information. You can drag and drop them into the appropriate locations, as well as name them.
3. Highlight multiple bill items: The application can easily highlight all of the items that are part of a selected bill. You can easily save the highlighted data into a Word or Excel document, complete with image attachments.
4. View bill items: You can choose to view only certain items from your bill, or view them all as a single series of documents.
5. Create customized project tabs: A graphical user interface helps you to create custom project tabs, by dragging and dropping them into the appropriate spot. Then, you can name them.
6. Invoice sections: It is easy to add a special invoice section to any document. You can also change the format of the sections, add notes and other information in each one.
7. Create and print project overviews: The software makes it easy to create project overviews, by designating the columns and rows necessary. You can easily customize them by dragging and dropping.
8. Control the print process: You can also control the order of the sections in a document, as well as the placement of these sections on an invoice.
9. Save and print projects: You can save and export your projects easily into Word, Excel, PDF and TIFF formats. The same goes for printing.
10. Import data: You can import data from all standard formats, including those from Excel, Word and PDF.
