What's New In?

Speed Reading is an application dedicated to people who want to improve their reading speed. It reads text aloud at a comfortable pacing, highlights the current word, and gives you the possibility to pause the session anytime you want to take a break. Comfortable interface for reading text The interface is clean and intuitive. It consists of a large window with a simple design and layout, which contains an area for pasting text to read. Worth noting is that it has a Clipboard live monitor, which means that it auto-pastes all copied contents, provided that they're in text format. A robotic male voice starts reading text automatically and highlights the current word to mark the current position. You can check out the total and selected number of characters, words and paragraphs in the status bar, as well as pause, resume or stop the reading session. Set the voice, speech rate, volume level, and other aspects As far as settings go, you can eliminate all text to paste a new one, generate a WAV audio recording with the spoken text and save it on the disk, and look up more information about speed reading in a Wikipedia article in a built-in web browser. Moreover, it's possible to increase or decrease the font size to make the reading experience more comfortable, switch to a robotic female voice, adjust the volume level and speech rate (default is 180 words per minute), and enable highlights by line, sentence or paragraph instead of word. When it comes to text structure, you can disable the Clipboard auto-speaking feature, remove web and email addresses, clean text, and combine paragraphs. Evaluation and conclusion It left a tiny footprint on system resources and remained stable throughout its runtime, without hanging, crashing or prompting error messages.
