technologically important materials in the future of energy storage technologies and the most promising new materials for such applications. DOE's Office of Energy Efficiency and Renewable Energy (EERE) is responsible for overseeing the development of advanced, cost-effective energy technologies such as batteries, fuel cells, and vehicles through a portfolio of investments that are expected to save consumers about $340 billion in energy costs over the life of their battery and hybrid vehicles. The materials identified in the report, sponsored by EERE, provide targets for researchers to design battery materials. This report is based on a survey of hundreds of experts in the energy-storage materials community. The first reports
