(After that, it will be the cumulative price of all licenses purchased)After a brief appearance at the weekly news conference, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger appeared before a packed House and Senate halls Thursday for the second time in as many days. “We are facing a very severe drought, and I am deeply concerned about California’s water supply and will be having meetings with legislators and the National Guard this week to discuss possible next steps,” said Schwarzenegger, flanked by legislative leaders and the heads of the state’s water boards. “What we need to do is to make sure that there is enough water for everyone, not just for people in San Diego or San Joaquin Valley,” he said. “We have to make sure that we understand what has happened, we take the necessary action to ensure that the drought is over, and we make sure that the people of California are able to enjoy what is left of the summer.” The governor did not address several of the top issues facing water managers -- including San Diego’s drought and the controversial proposal to siphon water from the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. The Senate’s leaders on Wednesday stunned many in Sacramento with a proposal to pump 60,000 acre-feet per year from the Delta to downstate as the solution to the drought crisis. The proposal was endorsed by three Democratic state senators who fear the Delta plan will make it more difficult for them in 2010 to defend their seats, a move unlikely to have been made without the two-
