I'd like to know what are good actions to take when I see a question being flagged as a duplicate, but it appears that the answers provided, while decent, are based on a shallow understanding of the subject. Some examples: This question: "Is it possible to interpret the commutative diagram of the first page of the Feynman Lectures on Physics using a rigorous proof in mathematics?". The problem is that this question has no underlying formal mathematical error. Rather, it's based on an incomplete understanding of the mathematics in the given diagram, so it seems like a bad fit for mathematics.SE. This question: "Why can you not deconstruct any field you like?" The problem is that the answerer appears to have a deep but incomplete understanding of fields, so it does not appear that this
