.Q: How to get the path from within a file that is being edited in Vim? When I launch Vim, I want to write something such as `./foo` Using `exe` or `procf` or `bash/zsh` expansion, I want to add this to the command line in the invocation of Vim, so that it executes "foo" without me having to type it in. I'm not wedded to any particular solution. In principle, I'd like to use something that can be interpreted by Vim (i.e. `exe` or `procf`). However, it is acceptable if there is a shell script that does that. The solution should work reasonably well for Linux, but I'm interested in whether there is a solution specific to OS X. So far, I've considered using `GNU_EDITOR` and an `ed` shell script; however, I'm not wedded to a solution that has to use a shell script. A: I highly recommend you use `exe` files for your script execution. They are very easily interpreted (unlike shell scripts) and are cross platform. The default Linux `exe` is an executable named `vim` provided by the Vim package. There are many others including `gvim` and `pyvim` available through the default repositories. Example `exe` script `#!/usr/bin/env exe`
