The story concerns a group of explorers who are developing a new type of rocket ship that will allow them to leave the Earth and travel to other stars, as long as they can deal with the social repercussions. Plot introduction Donald Wollheim's 1963 novel, Talking Heads, is set in the near-future in which sophisticated space-age technology allows a small band of scientists to leave the Earth and create a colony on the moon. The novel centers around a young married couple, a female biologist and a male mathematician, who are rejected by the astronauts sent to conduct the next colonization mission because they are women. They take refuge on a planetoid that is being used as a base camp for exploratory missions of neighboring solar systems. Plot summary The novel consists of four interlinked stories: The Engineer and the Asteroid, which mainly concerns a young engineer named Paul Parnell; David's Story, in which there is much emphasis on the character of a young boy called David Miller; The Music Room, involving young men who believe they can share their love of music with the universe; and Bye, Bye to the Earth, in which the characters try to deal with the problems of leaving their natural home. It's the story of a select group of people living on a planetoid orbiting a star in the Omicron Eridani system. Their aim is to leave their home and travel to other stars. Their colony is located there, and their spaceship is called the Mark V. They are a mixture of people of all kinds, from historians and sociologists to poets and musicians. They are the last human colony. Almost all the inhabitants die on a crash course with an asteroid, leaving only a handful of survivors. After that disaster, the survivors live in a controlled state of hibernation for half a century. David Miller, who is a young man, has an affair with a young woman, and the daughter of the chief historian brings them together. The young couple are taken for a group of five couples, that are going to explore an asteroid on which they found a sealed living space.
