the indian government has a web-based address system called mygov, which is used to conduct public service activities like renewal of passports, registering of marriages, and the notification of people that taxes will be deducted from their bank accounts. these activities are all overseen by the department of posts, and are conducted online using the mygov address system. in may 2017, the comptrollers office for union territories found that 2.2 million residents in the at&t region had been made vulnerable to cyberattacks. the attacks occurred because mygov was not configured with basic security and used unencrypted storage, making it vulnerable to hackers. because the mygov system was not set up correctly, the risk of attacks was increased, and the residents had to be sent new one-time passwords. mygov users should verify that their login information is secure, and update their passwords frequently. when issuing a passport or a similar document, the applicant has to fill out a form. the data is scanned and then converted into a pdf file, which is uploaded to a portal that lets the authorities see whether the applicant is eligible. if the applicant is confirmed as eligible, the data is transmitted to the central document verification department to print the original passport. the passport is then sent back to the applicant, but by then the data has already been sent to the authorities. to maintain the integrity of the data, the original scanned pdf needs to be retained by the applicant, who is given an expiry date for the passport. it is therefore vital for applicants to be aware of the risks of not retaining the original scanned file. they can take a print-out, but that will compromise the integrity of the data, as well as the security of the document. it is suggested that they retain a copy in the pdf format for when they submit their passport application to the passport authority.
