Browsing the World Wide Web today, you have a good chance of clicking on an ad for some dubious program or service that promises to make your computer nearly immortal, your inbox oracle-like, your monitor jet, even your toaster. We all know how well that's turned out. But this is a world that's much different than it used to be. For one thing, everybody—including those who worked for the program or service in question—is now regularly in touch with their inbox oracle-like, monitor jet, and toaster. And they get good news about them. Unlike the ads of previous years, they are no longer annoying, chaotic, and often irrelevant. Mostly, they are totally straightforward, no frills. They could have appeared in any newspaper, they could have been broadcast on TV or sent to you on an email. In fact, some of them appeared in this paper. 5ec8ef588b
