the game allows several snooker variants, including foursomes, fivesomes and sixesomes, with as few as three and as many as six players competing at a time. you can switch between playing solo or in a competition, and if you have the dlc, there's a computer opponent available. you can play for practice in exhibition mode, either against the computer ai, or against friends. backgammon-like trick shot mini-games also allow you to win prizes, notably ranking points, which go towards building your reputation as a pool player. the trick shot mini-games are really intriguing, with a wide range of colours to choose from, and even more choices if you have the expansion pack. there's also an auto-flinch system, which you can configure, that's similar to one of the better auto-shot systems i've seen. it's a tough game to balance, and a lot of people will be unhappy with it. you can play with the ai, but even though it's impressive, it can still be over-eager and snooker back in your hands. the "learn" option gives you the ability to watch your games and adjust, but it's not really enough. the ai is excellent at what it does, but it lacks the personality of a real opponent, and it's not the first time someone else has knocked you back. you can play online, but i didn't find that too helpful. perhaps the most useful feature is the shot summary at the bottom of the screen, which shows a coloured line of the shot and the point it's scored on. the point line gives you a better sense of what's happening with the balls, and shows you where the ball is on the table. the sound and graphics are good, but not in the top of the class. there's a lot of lag when playing online, and it's not very good at looking up snooker terms. in effect, i've found myself playing some pool with a mug, instead of using the pool table.
