this may not be an issue for the majority of users. you may also need to check if the device driver is the latest version. you may go to the device manufacturer's website for the device and download the latest drivers for your device. this feature may not be available on all computing systems. please check with the system vendor to determine if your system delivers this feature, or reference the system specifications (motherboard, processor, chipset, power supply, hdd, graphics controller, memory, bios, drivers, virtual machine monitor-vmm, platform software, and/or operating system) for feature compatibility, functionality, performance, and other benefits of this feature may vary depending on system configuration. note: if you are using raid array, make sure to install the drivers for your array as well. on my system, i have a raid 0 system set up with two hard drives. the raid is set up as two drives, but i will have to install both drivers for each drive. i just updated all of my drivers and now i am back to using my integrated graphics card. i hope this tutorial helps you if you have a similar issue. if you have any questions or comments, leave a comment below. some people might just say buy a new computer, but i really don't need to. this system does everything i need it to do, and with upgrade options to go ssd, why drop $400 on even a basic laptop that doesn't come close to the r/w speeds of my current system. i really hope microsoft has come up with a workaround. i understand they make the most amount of money of the mainstream, but i am also a strong believer in microsoft products and really enjoyed using the technical preview version of windows 10 for a few weeks. guess all i can do is keep my fingers crossed and hope for the best.
