Over the past 20 years, global digital technology has evolved by leaps and bounds, and far more so in some fields than others. Between our computers, tablets, and smart watches, we now have access to an incredible array of technology that makes our lives more efficient, and for the most part, we can say those devices make us happier. Here's a look at some technology you might not have known existed, but will shortly. Cassette tape Back in the 1970s, the idea of storing data on a physical object — a cassette tape, for example — was purely theoretical. But, thanks in large part to the evolution of the compact disc and the need to fit more music onto fewer devices, the storage medium has become ubiquitous. Cassettes are still used for media storage and are still available through online services like cassette.com, but the oldest generation of cassette tapes has been completely replaced with the cassette tape. Steel wool Steel wool is made of very finely-ground metal, and has a silvery-gray color. It's a wonderful natural abrasive that can be used for a wide variety of purposes. The best reason to use steel wool for cleaning, though, is that it's powerful enough to scrub most fabric stains from jeans in about three minutes. If you've ever used a sponge or even a terry cloth towel, steel wool does a better job of scrubbing it all away — the only downside is that steel wool leaves behind a film of unwanted iron, which is why you should never use steel wool on fabric that will be washed regularly. Propeller disk The propeller disk is also known as a Rotary engine, and as the name suggests, it spins a disk with blades or vanes that have a smaller diameter than that of the disk itself. As the disk spins, the blades push out gas, which propels the disk in the opposite direction.
