Users can also request that friends take a photo temporarily set as their FaceTime reference, then use the face-recognition feature to call up that photo later. (It's a bit like a temporary Facebook Live.) You can crop photos fully automatically now (obviously, this takes a ton of computing power, so if your desktop is feeling sluggish, this will help you get through the workload). Alternately, you can simply resize the crop view window and show the original image. Or, you can use the shape-based tool, Content-Aware Crop, to give you the right parameters—including exacting positioning and zone selection—for cropping. A Direct Selection tool now crops photos horizontally only. With this tool, you can manually crop an image, creating a narrow, blue border around your selection. And, if you start with an image you created in the Export As menu, you can request that Photoshop categorize that image, choosing Crop, or any other existing classification, for easy editing in the future. The latest update includes significant performance improvements to the Shape Tools and the Content-Aware Fill, along with enhancing the ability to detect and improve the exposure and other aspects of shadows. You can also use the Content-Aware Smoothing Tools to remove moiré, blur, and improve monotone lines. The advanced Content-Aware Crop tool uses a smart grid to help you get the best results. If you're using a mouse, you can now use the new Quick Selection tool to select an object without it lagging your system. Smooth selection, add borders, adjust radius, and crop photos can all be done without having to select pieces one by one. Adobe has also cut the number of steps involved in adding and removing a layer, and that should make any extraneous adjustments to a layer easier. But best of all, if you want to do away with a layer, you no longer need to cut and paste it. You can use the new Undo command to remove or hide it.

We're going to update our existing 3D tools in Photoshop to the newer native APIs and to provide the best experience for our users. In the first step, we're removing the legacy 3D tools and products, including the mesh features, the path features provided in 3D, including the Curvature tools, the Texel tool, the Bevel & Emboss tools and the Extrude & Bevel tools. New 3D features will be provided in a future release of Photoshop, including tools for working with 3D layers and objects, a 3D path feature, etc. In finishing the Evil Twin update, we're making some improvements to our new 3D tools in Photoshop, specifically the Lens Correction and 3D Filter tools. Lens Correction introduced in 2020.2 and 3D Filter in 2021.1 are both based a new native 3D GPU API and can be best used on faces or crazy-variety texture maps. We've been excited to see more artists jazzing up their designs with these tools. We hope to come back to these with more content, new 3D techniques, and more soon! This year we've been looking closely at email marketing to better understand how customers organize, schedule, and create email messages. We've noticed there are a variety email-creation workflows for which there are no standards in the industry. So, we've decided to create a new standard for this process. We've named it "Direct Mail". Within the next year, we plan to release Direct Mail as a new email-creation product in the Mail app (available on MacOS and Windows), powered by this new standard.
