Just before they put it on, the chefs share a quick lecture. They argue about which kind of grill to use, and go on about the fire. They reckon which wood is better for the grills, and discuss the most economical fuel to use. They estimate the time it will take to cook a meatloaf and the size of the salad bowl. The top brass hardly ever comes; his absence is noted by a slight downward look at the corners of the mouth, and the chef's cheeks take on a sad, resigned expression. But the noise never comes up, because the shouting comes after.
