But even as the snow continues in one of the largest cities in the U.S., Californians who are lucky enough to live in places other than Los Angeles are seeing even more snow in their backyards. Long Beach, which also has the second-largest recorded snowfall in the state, saw over 5 inches of snow on Saturday, bringing the total for the storm to over 19 inches. The city's mayor Robert Garcia tweeted on Saturday that Long Beach had received an amount of snowfall that has "changed our snow life for next 6 months." The unusually snowy weekend was fueled by an atmospheric river system that brought precipitation to California from far northern Canada to southern California, according to the National Weather Service (NWS). This weekend is still expected to see more snow moving in from the Northwest, according to the NWS, with 2 to 4 inches of accumulation expected at the state's most northerly cities. "I think it's going to be the biggest storm of the winter," said Kirk Raisner, a meteorologist with the NWS in California. "It's fairly intense. It's a lot for the state to deal with." The storm is already contributing to an unusual situation in Southern California, where some areas that have been inundated with snow have been visited by the worst drought in the U.S. in a quarter of a century.
