If you have multiple project files and don't love the default UI of the workspace being a content-heavy task bar, this comes in handy. While there are several ways to export PSD files seamlessly, the Outliner Elements plug-in,a PSD creation tool, is in my opinion the best. It makes it easy to move elements around the document with a Drag and drop feature. The Outliner Elements works great with text layers. In addition, it exports the images separately as it slices the layer and lets you choose the short or long names (depending on the export destination.) One of my favorite touches here is that the Touch Bar includes a dedicated space to quickly view words that you edit in the image turning the on-screen keyboard into a potential collaborative tool. Pinching to zoom out turns the on-screen keyboard into a tool for creating a signature. Pinching to zoom in to read a hashtag is a quick way to easily demarcate areas of interest, so anyone else working on the image can jot down notes to explain why a particular thing is important. (I had to do this when reviewing images from the "Honor Flight" to Washington, D.C. using the iPad Pro.) Adobe's Share [has] for Review is an amazing feature not found in any other platform, including traditional view cameras. Anyone coming into a project can simply click the button to insert their comment almost immediately. Even if I'm looking at an image in on-screen review mode, I can click the button in the Touch Bar to comment on where I am in the image. The comment will appear in a new tab in the foreground and I can jot off notes that will each be displayed on top of the image. I just need to do a little snip and I can write a comment that can be approved by the photographer who went on the adventure. It will also help me to relay to my colleagues what was or was not done effectively.
