Here's an example of the service's current login() method: `function login(username, password) { $http.post(SERVER_URL + LOGIN_PATH, { user: username, pwd: password }) .then(function(response) { // if everything goes well return response.data; // error handling }, function(error) { // error handling }) .then(function(data) { // user authentication return data; }); }` When I log-in, I get a 200 HTTP response code. At present, my unit tests are asserting that the correct HTTP response codes are returned. I'd like to implement authentication tests to prove that the correct user data is returned. What is the best way to achieve this? The server-side code is in Angular, so a Jasmine-style unit test is ideal. I'd appreciate it if you could point me
