The anticoagulant activity of the bradykinin inhibitor t-aminoprolylacetamidobenzamidine (Dalpha 1,7)arginine methyl ester (compound I) in vitro was investigated with the help of a new turbidimetric assay. The results are compared with those obtained in the thrombin time. A strong inhibition of blood coagulation was observed at a compound I concentration of 0.3 mg/ml. The anti-thrombin activity of compound I was better than that of heparin, but its effect on the antithrombin III activity was less pronounced. The results of in vivo experiments on rats were in agreement with those obtained in vitro. In dogs compound I was effective in the prevention of thrombus formation and further in the control of thromboembolic complications of myocardial ischaemia and also of the formation of pulmonary thromboemboli following intravenous injection.Preliminary characterization of the first seasonal vaccine for chicken pox in Israel. A live attenuated vaccine against chicken pox was licensed in the United States in 2003. In this paper we present the process and trial results of developing a similar vaccine for domestic use in Israel. The attenuated virus was first tested in a test-parental egg passage.
