The Camera mask lets you confidently clean up parts of your image that are unintentionally captured elsewhere in the frame, like when you don't have the right angle to your subject. With the new Live Mask feature, you can quickly and accurately make corrections to your image without needing to undo the changes you make most of the time. Compared to the first version of Live Paint, you get fewer brush states, a greater selection target area, and more fidelity for detailed drawings. Then there are the accelerated performance capabilities. These include the new GPU accelerated mode for Camera Raw, enabling the processing of raw files in just a few seconds. The fill-rate for importing and exporting large amounts of data is also dramatically improved. With the new Thermo mode, the iPad Pro can display the colors of your images as accurately as a professional color calibrator, enabling you to more easily tweak the color settings of your image. Adobe also added a few little tweaks in the performance settings to make it a little easier to work with Photoshop, including the option to open saved files directly from elsewhere in the photo editing system.
