If you use one of our bridging products, you may be wondering what happened to Garbasini or Kurios. Lightroom 5 can now handle both, as long as you choose the “Keep either this kind of plugin or that kind of plugin versions” option when syncing. If you only want to sync Lightroom to an external drive, not import a special plugin, you can continue to use our Garbasini or Kurios plug-ins. Or you can just use our new plug-ins for XMP and X3D, like OmniGraffle and Coral Draw. The new filter sets like “Portrait” and “Watercolor” help you to create certain styles of your own. Simply drag the filter preset into a Smart Object, open the filter controls above the histogram, and select the “Apply” button to lock the sharpening as you move the curves. Now you can edit the levels from any tool in LR, or even use Lightroom’s adjustment panel to fine-tune manually. We designed the new user interface with an emphasis on speed and on making it easier to manage your photos. You can cycle through photos in albums or Smart Collections by simply clicking, or scrolling. As you move your cursor away from the view area, the current selected photo fills the screen, so you can now continue to scroll around your photo even while the selection is active.
